When it comes to writing, I'm not exactly sure what happened — maybe it was my computer glitching out on me or some other manifestation of the universe laughing at my face — but all that I knew is that no words were coming out and my computer screen was filled with nothing but blank stares accusingly at me for wasting time on something so useless as writing. After a while, the blank stares disappeared and my hero started writing again. Of course, I'm talking about my computer screen, not my keyboard. Here's the thing: when it comes to writing for this blog, I use an old, busted keyboard that looks something like this: cdp delphi 2013.3 keygen cdp delphi 2013.3 activator These are actually pretty decent keys if you ask me because there are 19 of them and they only take up two rows on the keyboard so one could fit another key in between without disrupting the aesthetic perfection of the layout. But there is one problem with these keys: they are completely unresponsive. No matter what I do, my fingers are completely useless. I've looked around the house to see if there were any older keyboards laying around that I could borrow but apparently, my family has too much pride to let me use their old keyboards. So, in the end, I came to the conclusion that I needed a new keyboard. I know it seems like a small thing but with this very blog operating on the word count of the Gettysburg Address, it's essential for me to have my keyboard work properly at all times. Therefore, I can't stand to use my computer without a proper functioning keyboard — especially when it comes to writing. So I went out and bought one. I went down to the local Best Buy and told them that I wanted a sturdy-looking keyboard that was also stylish and affordable and that would be good for people who like to frequently spill milkshake on their keyboards. After enduring an hour of wading through the sea of junk keyboards scattered throughout the store, I finally found the keyboard for me: The Black Ice Mx by Thermaltake. cdp delphi 2013.3 keygen cdp delphi 2013.3 activator cdp delphi 2013.3 keygen cdp delphi 2013.3 activator It's a mechanical keyboard with blue LED lights in the keys and has a sexy hard-plastic finish that feels good when your fingers touch it. I wanted to take it home immediately but alas, my desire for a new keyboard is outweighed by my desire for not spending money on things I don't need.
